Former school dean held on $400K bail for shooting

Court. Rev. Harrison, three others were arraigned Wednesday for allegedly shooting a student in March.

Rev. Shaun O. Harrison and three other men were arraigned in Suffolk Superior Court on Wednesday morning in connection with an execution-style shooting on March 3. He is being held on $400,000 bail.

Harrison, 55, a popular dean at English High School in Jamaica Plain, was a vocal anti-gang activist who strongly supported the city's gun-buyback programs, is said to have lured a 17-year-old student to his apartment on Pompeii Street in Roxbury with the promise of girls and marijuana. While walking on Magazine Street, prosecutors say he shot the young man in the back of the head and fled. The victim suffered serious injury, but was able to flag down a passerby and was taken to Boston Medical Center and survived.

Police recovered surveillance tapes from nearby local businesses and arrested Harrison after an interview. Harrison claimed that he had never associated with students outside of school hours and that no student had ever been to his house.

Police then obtained a warrant for the contents of Harrison's phone and found a text message to the victim asking to meet up at 7 p.m. on the evening of the shooting. Other text messages included pictures of marijuana and guns. While Harrison was being interviewed, police observed three men leave his apartment. They were detained, charged and arraigned as well.

After obtaining a warrant, police found a rifle, a shotgun, ammunition and a large amount of packaged marijuana. They also recovered clothing matching the attire seen in the surveillance video, including a jacket and a pair of gloves, which tested positive for gunshot residue.

Police also reported finding a large Latin Kings mural painted on the inside of Harrison's home.

Harrison and the other men observed were noted to have "100" tattooed to them

Despite combing the area, Boston Police were unable to recover the weapon used in the shooting.

The trial begins next year.

Imagine Boston 2030 wants your vision for the city

Boston Mayor Marty Walsh took to the podium yesterday during the IDeAS: Innovative Design Alternatives Summit at Faneuil Hall. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

Where do you see yourself in 15 years?

Mayor Marty Walsh asked the same question to Boston residents Wednesday at the Innovative Design Alternatives Summit, where he kicked off the first citywide planning process in 50 years.

Imagine Boston 2030, a two-year public engagement effort, aims to carve out a roadmap to make a more perfect city in time for the city's 400th anniversary.

"It's been 50 years since we had a comprehensive plan for Boston," Walsh said in a video message filmed on top of the Ferdinand Building in Dudley Square. "In 1965, people were looking for the confidence to believe that the city's decline had ended. Today we're a thriving, healthy and innovative city. Now is our chance to set the course for the next generation. I'm inviting you to join us in imagining the Boston of 2030. From economic development to open space, from education to equality, your voice is the key to our success."

With the city's economy, population and development growing, Walsh aims to jump-start the conversation on enhancing design and architecture in town through a public forum at Imagine.Boston.gov.

"We don't just want to grow bigger," Walsh said. "We want to grow smarter, more resilient and we want to grow more equitably across the city. We need to make sure that while opportunity continues to grow, it needs to be shared. This means closing historic gaps that divide us by race and by gender in our communities and our workforce."

The baseline evaluations are underway and the city hopes to boost the public input in time for this coming fall, when community members will be encouraged to contribute any and all ideas in shaping Boston to come. These ideas and suggestions will go toward a master plan expected to be completed by summer 2017.

An apology to our readers

Dear Readers,

We've heard from many of you about our coverage yesterday about a serial groper who has been targeting women in and around Boston University's campus. While our intention was to raise awareness of sexual assault and harassment within our community, it's clear that that is not what was conveyed with our cover and headline.

Sexual assault is a largely silent epidemic in communities worldwide that affects women, men and children.

Survivors of all backgrounds should feel comfortable talking about their experiences without fear that they will be judged or blamed by others.

We will try harder in our future coverage to ensure that that will happen.

Lastly, if you know anything about the perpetrator of the serial assaults occurring in the area around Boston University, we urge you to report it to the Boston Police Department or the Boston University Police.

Sincerely,
THE METRO BOSTON STAFF

Bomber volunteered as family fell apart

Testimony. More witnesses are speaking on behalf of the convicted Boston Marathon bomber.

Lawyers seeking to spare convicted Boston Marathon bomber Dzhokhar Tsarnaev from the death penalty called witnesses on Wednesday who described his volunteer work with disabled children, his adoration of his older brother and his father's mental illness.

Tsarnaev, 21, was found guilty last month of all charges related to the 2013 terror attack.

Defense lawyers want life in prison without possibility of parole rather than death for Tsarnaev, claiming that he wouldn't have bombed the marathon had it not been for his radical older brother, 26-year-old Tamerlan, who was killed after a gunfight with police days after the bombing.

A longtime friend of Tsarnaev's family on Wednesday told the jury that Dzhokhar was a studious youth and adored Tamerlan, who had begun to cultivate a deep interest in Islam, politics and conspiracy theories.

"Anytime Tamerlan would say 'Let's do this or that,' he would always go along. He would be a good younger brother, I would say," Elmirza Khozhugov told jurors via a remote video feed from Kazakhstan in Central Asia.

Khozhugov said Tamerlan started to change after an Armenian man named Misha began visiting the Tsarnaev family home in Cambridge to talk to him about Islam and politics.

"Conspiracy theories. He was getting into that a lot," Khozhugov said. At one point, Tamerlan gave up his favorite pastime, boxing, because Misha had told him that "in Islam hitting people on the head is not a good thing."

Tsarnaev volunteered in a program to help children with disabilities at the Winchester Public Schools, according to the program's leader Jennifer Callison.

"He was kind, he was respectful, he came to every event," Callison told the jury. Asked if she could have imagined Tsarnaev would bomb the marathon, she replied, "No." REUTERS

Bomb threats

School threat bill would require educators to contact safety officials

Citing a "substantial uptick" in bomb threats called into state schools, State Fire Marshal Stephen Coan wants lawmakers to require educators to immediately notify public safety officials when they receive such calls.

In the "vast majority" of cases, schools reach out to public safety officials, Coan said. "But there is a gap."

Between September 2013 and June 2014, there were 38 calls to respond to schools for bomb threats, the Department of Fire Services reports. Between September 2014 and April 2015, there were 62 calls.

"What we're really trying to do is build strong communication links," Coan said.

The state police bomb squad is the primary responder to bomb threats or suspicious packages.

Germanwings pilot rehearsed crash on outbound flight

The BEA will issue a final report in about a year that may include recommendations on cockpit doors and the handling of pilots' medical records by the airline industry. / GETTY IMAGES

Co-pilot. Andreas Lubitz was in charge of flying the plane on the return leg, a routine practice that builds up experience.

The Germanwings co-pilot suspected of deliberately crashing a jet in the French Alps rehearsed the fatal maneuver on the morning of the disaster, and had twice been refused medical papers needed to fly, investigators said on Wednesday.

The French BEA accident investigation agency said the co-pilot had five times set the autopilot to take the Airbus down to just 100 feet while the captain was out of the cockpit on the outbound flight to Barcelona from Dusseldorf.

But the brief twists of an altitude dial, mimicking those which crashed the A320 on its way back to the German city 2-3 hours later, would not have been noticed by passengers or controllers because they were quickly reversed and were masked by the fact that the jet had already started an authorized descent, the BEA said.

A preliminary report on the return flight that crashed on March 24, killing all 150 people on board, confirmed a growing picture of painstaking preparations carried out by the co-pilot, Andreas Lubitz.

"I can't speculate on what was happening inside his head; all I can say is that he changed this button to the minimum setting of 100 feet and he did it several times," said Remi Jouty, director of the French BEA accident investigation agency.

"These very brief actions on the previous flight were a sort of rehearsal of the maneuver," he said. REUTERS

Flight 9525

Digging into data and cockpit recordings recovered from the jet's "black boxes," the BEA gave the most detailed picture so far on what happened in the cockpit

- Shortly after the A320 reached cruise height, the captain told Lubitz he was leaving the cockpit and asked him to take over the radio, the BEA said. No reason was given, but Jouty noted it is normal for pilots to leave the cockpit to go to the toilet, for example.
- Just over 30 seconds after the door closed, leaving Lubitz alone in the cockpit for the second time that day, he entered the instruction he had rehearsed.

- By turning a dial, he ordered the plane's autopilot to descend to 100 feet, the BEA said. This was the lowest setting possible and enough to crash into mountains ahead. He then altered another dial to speed the jet up.
- The report listed numerous warnings that went unanswered as the jet sped lower. These included four attempts to reach him from outside the cockpit by interphone and a crescendo of calls and knocks that ended with "violent blows" on the door.

- As the jet steadily lost height, Marseille air traffic controllers tried 11 times to contact the Germanwings jet.
- Just over two minutes before the crash the French military weighed in, trying three times to contact the crew on an emergency frequency, followed by a call from another plane.
- Finally, the aircraft's ground-proximity warning system kicked into life, urging the co-pilot to "pull up."

SpaceX puts passenger spaceship through test run

A Space Exploration Technologies' passenger spaceship made a quick debut test flight on Wednesday, shooting itself off a Florida launch pad to demonstrate a key emergency escape system.

The 20-foot-tall Dragon capsule, a modified version of the spacecraft that flies cargo to the International Space Station, fired up its eight side-mounted thruster engines at 9 a.m. to catapult itself nearly one mile above the Atlantic Ocean.

The flight ended less than two minutes later with the capsule's parachute splashdown about 1.4 miles east of the Cape Canaveral Air Force Station launch site.

The purpose of the test was to demonstrate an escape system to carry the capsule to safety in case of a fire or accident during launch. SpaceX plans to refly the capsule later this year aboard a Falcon 9 rocket to test an abort maneuver at supersonic speed and high altitude.

"Essentially, it's kind of like an ejection seat in an airplane. You have the ability to leave the pad sitting in the capsule, and the capsule would come off and land," NASA astronaut Eric Boe said during an interview on NASA TV. REUTERS

California might shore up water supplies for drought

Seawater. Desalination plants are designed to make seawater drinkable.

California water regulators on Wednesday adopted a new uniform permitting process for ocean desalination projects that are expected to expand in number as the drought-stricken state increasingly turns to the sea to supplement its drinking supplies.

The desalination rules, which put some decisions for such plants in the hands of statewide regulators rather than local water boards, come a day after the state demanded sweeping cutbacks in water use by cities and towns.

The desalination plan enacted by the State Water Resources Control Board on Wednesday, sets up a uniform permitting process for plants built to reclaim seawater and also limit the amount of salt that the facilities would be allowed to release back into the sea.

California's drought has thrust seawater desalination into the spotlight as San Diego County, Santa Barbara and other cities push ahead with treatment plants that will turn the Pacific Ocean into a source of drinking water.

in Huntington Beach and is seeking a final permit to begin construction next year.

On Tuesday, the State Water Resources Control Board enacted California's first rules for mandatory statewide cutbacks in water use. The emergency regulations, which require some communities to trim water use by as much as 36 percent, were approved unanimously just weeks after Democratic Governor Jerry Brown stood in a dry mountain meadow and ordered statewide rationing.

Meanwhile, the city of Santa Barbara is taking steps to modernize and reactivate a smaller $34 million desalination plant built during an earlier drought but moth-balled after a trial run in 1992, when that water crisis abated. REUTERS

Sandberg and her husband David Goldberg / GETTY IMAGES

Facebook Chief Operating Officer Sheryl Sandberg re-emerged in public on Tuesday after the accidental death of her husband last week, offering a personal tribute to him in a Silicon Valley memorial service and on her Facebook page.

Many of the tech world's top executives filled a 1,700-seat auditorium at Stanford University to commemorate David Goldberg, chief executive of SurveyMonkey. He died at age 47 on Friday after a treadmill accident during a vacation in Mexico.

"We had 11 truly joyful years of the deepest love, happiest marriage and truest partnership that I could imagine," Sandberg posted on Facebook. "He gave me the experience of being deeply understood, truly supported and completely and utterly loved — and I will carry that with me always."

Her post appeared hours after the ceremony, a tribute to the low-key executive, whose marriage to Sandberg added to his fame from building a company valued at $2 billion.

Speakers described Goldberg's self-deprecation, modesty and selflessness, and the event, closed to the media, included several nods to his passions.

On their way out, guests were offered Minnesota Vikings baseball caps as a reminder of the Minneapolis-born Goldberg's lighthearted nature and love of sports, according to a person who attended the service and who declined to be identified.

Also on hand were playing cards stamped with his initials and poker chips. During the ceremony, U2's Bono sang "One," the Irish rock band's anthem to love and support.

Many began offering personal tributes to Goldberg on social media on Saturday, including Facebook Chief Executive Mark Zuckerberg. Sandberg, however, remained silent until Tuesday morning, when she responded to a public note by President Barack Obama. REUTERS

Five things you need to know

Prince to perform in Baltimore in wake of black man's death

Rock and Roll Hall of Famer Prince will perform a special concert in Baltimore on Sunday, apparently in part to honor the 25-year-old black man whose death from spinal injuries suffered in police custody sparked weeks of protest and a day of rioting.

The Grammy award-winning musician will hold his "Rally 4 Peace" show on Mother's Day along with his backing band 3RDEYEGIRL, Royal Farms Arena said in a statement on Tuesday night. The statement added that "superstar guests" were also expected to attend.

"Wear something gray," reads a promotional image for the concert, seemingly to reference Freddie Gray, who died last month after a week in the hospital following his April 12 arrest.

Gray's death became the latest flashpoint in a national outcry over police killings of unarmed black men and other minority groups in the United States, and provoked weeks of largely peaceful protests in the city punctuated by a day of arson and looting on April 27.

Last Friday, Baltimore's chief prosecutor announced charges against all six police officers involved in Gray's arrest, ranging from misconduct in office to second-degree murder.

Okla. passes bill allowing designated school staff to carry guns

School districts in Oklahoma would be able to designate an employee to carry handguns on school property under a bill approved by the state Senate and sent to Gov. Mary Fallin.

Backers said the measure that easily passed in the Republican-dominated legislature would promote school safety while opponents said having the firearms on campus could put students and teachers in danger. Fallin's office was not available for comment on whether the Republican governor would sign the bill into law. REUTERS

Small town evacuated after oil train derailed in ND

A BNSF train carrying crude oil derailed and caught fire in North Dakota on Wednesday, forcing the evacuation of a nearby small town just days after the United States and Canada announced reforms to improve the safety of such shipments.

About 40 residents from the tiny Wells County town of Heimdal were evacuated after 10 tank cars left the rails, fire officials and the state's emergency management agency said.

There were no injuries, officials said.

Black smoke was visible for miles as more than 300,000 gallons of crude oil burned. REUTERS

Mayweather's ex sues for $20 million

Floyd Mayweather may have won in the ring on Saturday, but he may face another battle — in court.

Ex-girlfriend Josie Harris filed a lawsuit on Tuesday against the champion boxer for $20 million for defamation after Mayweather claimed Harris was on drugs during a 2010 domestic violence incident, reports CNN.

Mayweather claimed in an interview with Katie Couric that instead of beating Harris, he was simply restraining her because she was on drugs. He was arrested in September 2010 after he punched Harris at his home in Las Vegas.

EU seeks UN approval to seize migrant boats

United Nations.

About 1,800 migrants have perished during the crossing already this year.

Europe is seeking United Nations Security Council approval to seize boats used to traffic migrants across the Mediterranean from Libya, though diplomats said Russia has signaled it would not allow destruction of the vessels.

European Union leaders agreed last month to "identify, capture and destroy vessels before they are used by traffickers," but it is unclear how that may be achieved and the 28-nation bloc wants U.N. authorization for its operation.

U.N. diplomats, speaking on condition of anonymity, said a resolution has been drafted by European members of the Security Council — Britain, France, Lithuania and Spain — under Chapter 7 of the U.N. Charter which allows the use of force.

The draft text would authorize the EU to intervene on the high seas, in Libyan territorial waters and on-shore in Libya to seize vessels "to prevent trafficking, smuggling and illegal migration across the Mediterranean," said a senior U.N. diplomat.

Diplomats said Russia, which has veto power on the Security Council, initially appeared supportive of the measures, but drew the line at approving destruction of boats. The Russian U.N. mission was not immediately available for comment.

EU foreign policy chief Federica Mogherini is due to brief the U.N. Security Council behind closed doors on Monday on the proposed operations.

Lady Gaga trying to get us to rethink the Justin Bieber hate Justin Bieber has found a surprising ally in Lady Gaga. The two pop stars spent some time together at the Met Gala earlier this week and took a few selfies — one of which Gaga herself posted recently along with a lengthy caption coming to the troubled Canadian wunderkind's defense. "He really has a sweetness to him," she writes. "He grew up in front of the whole world. I reminded him to not get bothered. Because at the end of the day, he's the boss, and life isn't always roses. Lots of thorns." OK, so maybe that was actually a veiled threat, who knows. And while Gaga has always had a knack for seeing the world differently than others, I'm having trouble buying this whole Bieber being "sweet" thing.

Fight of the century: Zayn Malik and Louis Tomlinson Twitter war

Like many fans, we've been impressed with how smoothly the One Direction split seemed to be going — Zayn Malik and the rest of the boys all said and did the right things and actually seemed quite mature for their ages. Until yesterday, that is. Twitter blew up as Malik, his producer Naughty Boy and One Directioner Louis Tomlinson began trading veiled and not-so-veiled tweets about Malik's split from the superstar band. It all began when Naughty Boy tweeted what appeared to be a Mac Photobooth picture of himself and Zayn Malik with the text "Replace this."

Tomlinson tweeted a vague tweet several hours later saying, "Remember when you were 12 and you used to think those Mac filters for your pictures were cool haha! Some people still do HA!" This tweet may or may not have been directed at Naughty Boy, but Malik certainly perceived it to be as he later tweeted directly at Tomlinson saying, "Remember when you had a life and stopped making b—y comments about mine?" Shots fired! We're sure that, for One Direction fans, this feels a lot like watching your parents fight — parents that you have posters of in your bedroom. MATT LEE

Shocker: Lindsay Lohan falling behind on community service duties

Today marks the day Lindsay Lohan has to check in with the court and show that she's making progress on those pesky 125 hours of community service she was ordered to finish by May 28, and word is she's still got a long way to go. "Lindsay has hardly made a dent in the court-ordered 125 hours of community service. It's an extremely unimpressive number so far — less than 20 hours total," a source tells Radar Online. Lohan was last seen on a shopping spree in Milan, and an Instagram photo she posted Tuesday of some envelope stuffing, captioned "Community Service — office day," featured a suspiciously European phone charger. But certainly she'll pull it together in the next three weeks, right?

Adele dressed as George Michael for her birthday

It's Adele's party, and she'll dress up like George Michael if she wants to. The "Skyfall" singer posted a photo of herself gussied up as Michael for her 27th birthday, complete with aviator glasses and excessive stubble. "Thank you for the birthday wishes. I had a wonderful time," she writes. "I was my hero." To be fair, there are a lot worse music icons she could emulate heading into the ever so ominous — for musicians, at least — age of 27.

Wars: The Force Awakens?" YouTuber Michael Murdock has you covered. He's taken the enthusiasm-building teaser released last month and digitally inserted Jar Jar Binks into every scene, re-dubbing it "Star Wars: The Binks Awakens." Terrifying and awful, sure, but with six months still to go before the film comes out, we could all use something to temper our expectations. Remember what happened with "The Phantom Menace"?

Jane Fonda and Lily Tomlin aren't too old to party Interview. The "Grace and Frankie" stars take on Netflix.

Jane Fonda has taken peyote. The 77-year-old actress, activist and fitness guru isn't being shy about the practical experience she's brought to "Grace and Frankie," the Netflix series she stars in alongside Lily Tomlin. "Among other things," she says matter-of-factly. "It makes me throw up, just like the show says. It's good to mix it with mushrooms."

Doing hallucinogens is one thing, but doing television? That's not something Fonda could've fathomed until a few years ago when she signed on for Aaron Sorkin's "The Newsroom" on HBO. "When I started in movies in the late '50s, early '60s, you never would do television. People who did television never made movies, and if you possibly could make movies, you never would do television," Fonda says. "It wasn't until about seven or eight years ago that I realized I really wanted to do television, and I wanted to give a cultural face to an older woman. So when this came along, it was a dream come true."

It was also a chance to work with her "Nine to Five" co-star and longtime pal Tomlin again, something that—at least according to Tomlin—has long been a priority. "I'd always tell my agent, or my partner and I might be trying to develop something that has to do with older people," Tomlin says. "When my agent called me and told me, 'Are you really trying to do something with Jane?' I said, 'Yeah, sure. I'd like to.' And then he brought ['Friends' co-creator] Marta [Kauffman] to us, and she gave us the notion of her idea, and after that, we jumped in with both feet."

That idea, by the way, is a doozy. Grace (Fonda) and Frankie (Tomlin) are two very different women who've maintained a tenuous friendship because their husbands (Martin Sheen and Sam Waterston) are law partners. But when the husbands announce that they're both gay and are running off together, Grace and Frankie are left with each other to help pick up the pieces.

So how do two women go decades with the same men not realizing something is amiss? Tomlin explains, "Like I say in that speech on the beach, 'I suspected things. I thought something was up, but...'" And then Fonda interrupts her: "When he asked you to use the dildo? It's called denial."

A big selling point for both stars, aside from getting to work together again, was the image the series projects of women of a certain age. "We both get enough scripts to know that when you're an older woman, you tend to be the butt of a joke," Fonda says.

Tomlin elaborates: "I always resented that. I didn't like that. If a woman didn't have autonomy, if she was somebody's grandmother, and they made her into a doddering little old lady who just puts up with stuff and kind of was vague, that just rubs me the wrong way — unless a very artful hand was on that depiction, and then I might have to look at it another way or something. But that usually doesn't happen."

But back to the peyote. Tomlin, for one, wants to assure everyone that while she and Fonda may have personal experience to draw on, they're no Method actresses. "We had to kind of project into that experience," she says of the drugged-out beach scene in the first episode. "No matter how much experience we've had, it's not like we actually are eating peyote at that moment."

Abigail Breslin is the walking dead

Interview. The Oscar nominee talks about laughing through making the grim zombie drama "Maggie."

Abigail Breslin, star of "Zombieland," is no stranger to the undead. But "Maggie" is different. It's not a horror film but an intense drama with Breslin as a teen slowly turning into a zombie, all while being watched over by her parents, played by Joely Richardson and one Arnold Schwarzenegger. Not that she let a sad tale get her down.

This is a pretty grim film.

He'll be back

How was Schwarzenegger?

I grew up with brothers, so Arnold Schwarzenegger was big in my house. I don't like to have preconceived notions before I meet icons, but there's no way you're not going to think, "I'm going to meet the Terminator." But he's so sweet and so warm and so generous, as an actor and as a person. When he's complimented, he'll always find a way to turn it around so he's actually complimenting someone else. I did have one cool moment with him: When he was leaving to go back to his trailer, he said, "I'll be back." He was just saying it normally, but for me, it was such a moment.

How did you all keep your spirits up?

You end up having more fun, I think, on serious movies because you know it's going to be intense, so you try to have as much fun as you can. Those scenes where we're really serious and emotional, we'd be cracking up. There's one scene with Joely Richardson [where] we just couldn't stop laughing. I was surprised they could find takes where we weren't laughing or smiling.

This is more a drama than a horror film, but you've said horror is a favorite genre of yours.

I'm one of those obnoxious horror fans who will go to the movies and really get super into it and then have full-blown arguments and conversations about it after. When I got the script for this, I just thought it was a zombie horror. And it wasn't what I expected. It's a human movie that just happens to deal with zombie-like creatures. I don't even see it as a zombie movie. It's more about being sick and isolated. Getting to wear zombie makeup, though, was a real bonus.

Linda Cardellini won't crack up

Interview. The actress talks about helping give the Kristen Wiig comedy "Welcome to Me" heart.

There are a lot of characters horrified by the bizarre things Kristen Wiig's Alice does in the comedy "Welcome to Me." But one who's not horrified is her best friend Gina, played by Linda Cardellini. The "Freaks and Geeks" star — currently on Netflix's "Bloodline" and, briefly, in "Avengers: Age of Ultron" — liked the way Gina made Alice and the film around her seem slightly more serious.

Playing the straight man to very funny people can be very difficult, one imagines. Was it hard not to crack up and ruin takes?
Sometimes! It could be hard to keep a straight face. We did a 15-minute improv where she hides in the bathroom, and we just kept going back and forth, back and forth. But [Alice] is so heartbreaking. I don't think the audience is ever laughing at this woman with mental illness. You're laughing with her at certain times and feeling terrified and bad for her at others.

Gina plays an important role in grounding the movie, showing that Alice isn't just a loner but someone with real relationships.

The relationship between Alice and Gina is really fun. It's like this platonic romantic comedy between the two of them. They come together and fall apart. I loved the way I was able to add meaning to the story for her.

What kind of backstory was worked out for them?

We imagined that her mental illness didn't totally surface until she was a little bit older. There's a part of Alice that Gina knows that no one else really does, except for her family. That comes from being friends since they were little kids. They love each other very much. There's a part of Gina that admires the bravery that Alice clearly has.

Mental illness can be a tricky subject to deal with in any film.

I was drawn to the idea that mental illness is hard for someone who has mental illness, but it's also difficult for the people who are there for them. It's hard to watch somebody go through something or be destructive toward themselves. The people who love them have a difficult time with that because it's hard to watch them be hurt or hurt themselves. [The film] doesn't treat it as this quirky little problem. There's a fine line.

The two tones are really intertwined here.

That's something I really liked about "Freaks and Geeks," that you can take something that's serious and painful and show it in a way that people can relate to in a real way but also in a way that people can laugh at it.

One more thing

In other news

You actually suddenly pop up in "Avengers: Age of Ultron." Were you under lock and key not to reveal that?

Yeah. I didn't even tell my parents and my family. Then it leaked on the Internet that I was somehow in it. I got a lot of heat for that from them. [Laughs]

I imagine you were probably used to keeping secrets from your stint on "Mad Men," where Matthew Weiner was adamant about people not revealing spoilers.

I don't like spoilers either. After I was done with the show, I was invited to be in the table reads. I would politely decline. I just love that show. I prefer to have things surprise me.

In thinking about this week's topic, a wave of exhaustion fell over me. Here I was thinking I'd be talking about "May the 4th be with you" and the incredible "Star Wars" memories I heard all day. Except that, when I woke up this morning, I read about Joss Whedon being driven off Twitter by death threats and harassment because of a scene in "Avengers: Age of Ultron" where Black Widow discusses wanting to have a baby and feeling like a monster because she can't.

If you guys have been following my column, you know that I'm pretty sensitive to these things. Personally, I forgot that scene was even in the film. I have some serious issues with the lack of women in the Marvel Cinematic Universe: the fact that Black Widow toys are virtually absent from the market and definitely with certain leaked emails that indicate certain studio executives don't think women belong in superhero films. I groaned audibly when the "prima nocta" joke was made. Certainly not funny, and definitely offensive.

All of that said, the Babygate scene didn't register. I kind of thought she was talking about the whole assassin thing making her a monster. I absolutely get the annoying need to take the few female characters we have and either hook them up or give them babies. It speaks to a larger issue in the movie world. That said, some people like to be in love and have babies. Still, I totally get the issues with the scene, even if I don't personally have them.

The thing that upsets me here is, once again, the online bullying. Having been the victim of it, repeatedly, I can tell you exactly what it does to you. It makes you jumpy. It makes you consider security cameras in your home. It makes you wonder why you do what you do for a living.

Whether you argue that Joss Whedon has been a great ally for women or have issues with his choices, it's certainly open for discussion. Discussion, not threats. I'm saying all of this because sometimes reading one thing can really affect you. Please just remember that there are actual people on the other side of your tweets. Just knock it off already.

The R&B artist returns with her deeply personal sixth studio album, "Jackie." She talks motherhood, seductive dancing and Baltimore.

RICHARD PECKETT
richard.peckett@metro.lu

It has been a productive but turbulent past year for Ciara. First, the R&B singer gave birth to son Future Zahir Wilburn in May of last year, broke off her engagement to the baby's father and rapper Future following rumors of infidelity, started on her new album "Jackie" just a matter of weeks before her due date and is appearing on the NBC variety show "I Can Do That." Clearly, the 29-year-old, who's about to embark on her first tour in six years, has got the motherly multitasking down. Her record, as she explains to us, reflects her post-baby "empowerment."

Your album has a track called "Jackie (B.M.F.)" (bad motherf—er). What makes you a bad motherf—er?

I love this song. It was so funny; I went into the studio and just felt it was so heavy on my chest to just scream, "I'm a bad mother..." Of course, I was inspired having my son, and I was just thinking, there ain't nothing I can't do. I feel like I can conquer the world. When I think about my journey and everything that I've experienced personally and professionally, I feel so strong and empowered, especially after having a child.

You're known for your sensual and raunchy dancing in tracks like "Love Sex Magic." What is it about that style of dance that you enjoy?

The thing for every woman is that we like to feel sexy — it's a form of confidence.

The songs that I do show the sensual side, and when I go there with it, it's fun to take control, and it is a form of confidence. And I like to make sure that women are inspired by the dance moves and do it for their guy.

your response to what's happening there?

I understand the frustration of the community and the heartache. I think that there has to be a better way to respond than tearing down the town and the school. You should fight for your rights and beliefs, but it is the kind of concept that if I hit you, and you hit me back, we're both going down. But if you hit me, and I try to find a better way to respond, we can change the situation.

Would you like to be more involved in communities or politics?

I do believe in taking advantage of this amazing platform that God has given me, which enables me to speak to and inspire millions of people all around the world. I'm joining first lady Michelle Obama in Detroit this weekend to talk about education. It's moments like this that allow me, as an entertainer, to use my voice to make a difference.

Somerville's annual dining festival returns, with even more restaurants to sample.

LISA WEIDENFELD
@LisaWeidenfeld
lisa.weidenfeld@metro.us

Somerville's status as a foodie hot spot has evolved to the point where picking a restaurant for dinner can be a profound inner struggle. Are you in the mood for German delicacies, à la Bronwyn? Tapas at La Brasa? Or maybe you've been craving the Indian food at Diva. If all of those options are giving you dinner choice anxiety, you're in luck: All of those restaurants, and quite a few more, will be part of the 17th annual Taste of Somerville, returning June 3.

"There's really two driving forces" behind the festival, says Morgan Bigley, general manager of Highland Kitchen. He's also the dining and night-life chair for the city's Chamber of Commerce, and one of the organizers for the festival. "One thing is just to give everybody an opportunity to see the really rich and vibrant food and brewing community that we have in Somerville." This includes more than 60 vendors in one place. "And then the other half of it," he says, "which is equally important, is that it's a charity event."

That's right, this isn't just an opportunity for you to pig out (possibly on an actual suckling pig). The festival benefits a charitable organization every year, with this year's beneficiary being the Somerville Home.

This is the second year the Taste has been outside (it's at 50 Holland St. in Davis Square), and Bigley's first as one of the organizers. "What I was excited about was getting all those really fresh, new faces in there alongside the restaurants that have been in Somerville for years and years," he explains. Hence, you can grab a waffle from the Neighborhood Restaurant, and then head over to get a snack from Casa B.

Though the area has plenty of neighborhoods with good food, Bigley thinks there are a few things that set Somerville apart. "My feeling about the Somerville restaurant community is that there's really a lot of character and a lot of honesty. Somerville is a very community-driven city, despite its somewhat larger size. You really get a feeling of neighborhood and a feeling of commitment to the community from all these different businesses."

Of course, the most important question is, how do you avoid filling up before you've tried it all? "It's always hard because everything looks so good," Bigley says with a laugh. "My advice to everybody is don't get caught up by that first table you see. Take a look, see if there's any that you've been dying to try, and do a lap and see all the cool things Somerville has to offer."

We tried to get details from Bigley about what Highland Kitchen will be serving up, but he swore they hadn't decided yet. "We like to let people think we're organized, but we're usually trying to figure it out a couple days before."

 Wendy Chidester paints hyper-realistic still lifes of old objects from the middle of the 20th century — candlestick telephones, bikes, electric fans, typewriters, luggage — in a matter-of-fact manner, as if they're being displayed in some museum of bygone possessions. Nostalgia is minimal here, however. Rather, Chidester abstracts these objects from their history, showing them to us simply as beautiful things.

Saint John

Canada's oldest incorporated city

With gloriously wild and unspoiled landscapes right on its doorstep and the highest tides in the world lapping its downtown core, Saint John offers a truly unique experience.

If you think there's not much left to discover within striking distance of home, ask yourself what you know about Saint John, New Brunswick. The answer may well be "not very much" or "nothing at all," and yet there are rewards aplenty waiting for those who visit the only city on the Bay of Fundy (famed for the highest tides on the planet) with North America's only UNESCO Global Geopark on its doorstep.

With such world-class appeal, you might expect to find a city transformed by tourism, but much of Saint John's charm lies in its workaday character. A bustling commercial port shares the waterfront with a growing number of cruise ships, and on city streets, New Brunswickers go about their everyday business amid the fine art galleries, craft boutiques, great restaurants, modern shopping centers and characterful pubs that delight all who disembark down a gangplank, step off a plane or drive across the border from New England.

Market Square and the Boardwalk

This is the city's most festive summertime spot, with bands, buskers and festivals, restaurants with sunny patios overlooking the action and public artworks. Sniff the sea air while strolling Harbor Passage through waterfront parks (www.marketsquaresj.com).

Saint John City Market

The oldest indoor farmers market in the country is also one of the best, in an impressive brick building that survived the Great Fire of 1877. Stalls are stacked with produce, prepared foods, wine and arts and crafts, every day except Sunday (www.sjcitymarket.ca).

rocky canyon on its way to the bay; come back at high tide to see the force of the bay waters pushing the rapids in the opposite direction. Pep it up by zip-lining across the rapids (www.saintjohnadventures.ca).

Stonehammer Geopark

A billion years of geological and climatic upheavals and the beginnings of life itself are embossed on the landscape here. See remnants of the last Ice Age, the birthplace of the Atlantic Ocean and land that once adjoined Africa. Canoe on Ice Age waters, climb 500 million-year-old lava rockfaces and hike unspoiled coastal wilderness (www.stonehammergeopark.com).

Getting there

Saint John is 70 miles from the U.S.

Did you know?

- Downtown Saint John is known locally as "Uptown."
- Actor Donald Sutherland's first theater experience was in Saint John, with childhood puppet classes at the Museum of New Brunswick.
- Saint John is home to Canada's oldest brewery, Moosehead.
- The first Miss Canada, Winnifred Blair, crowned in 1923, was from Saint John.

Explore history in Valley Forge

In the rolling countryside near Philadelphia, a ragtag collection of disorganized militias became a unified army that defeated the most powerful military in the world.

The most common question at Valley Forge National Historical Park is "Where was the battle?" But there was no battle. Valley Forge was the winter encampment of the fledgling Continental Army in the winter of 1777-78.

Made up of volunteers, George Washington's army was undisciplined, unorganized, under-supplied and no match for the British. They barely survived defeats over the summer and fall.

While the Redcoats retired to the warmth of Philadelphia for the winter, the Colonials huddled in rough wooden huts. But schooled by the likes of Generals von Steuben and Lafayette, the rabble were "forged" into the Continental Army. When they marched out in June 1778, they were a united group of soldiers able to match the highly trained British. You can follow a self-drive tour or take a ranger-guided walking tour, a trolley tour or a bicycle tour. All stop at Washington's Headquarters, Memorial Arch and reconstructed cabins. Much of the era's history lies outside the park grounds. Self-guided "Patriot Trails" offer itineraries designed around different themes (www.valleyforge.org/revolution).

The park is popular for a lot of other recreation. Hiking, horseback riding, bird watching, jogging, photography and picnicking draw visitors to an oasis in an otherwise highly developed and frequently congested area. It's not unusual to find an artist painting the landscape or a musician playing under a tree.

The Colonials may have wanted for clothing and supplies, but that's not a worry today. The King of Prussia Mall boasts over 400 name-brand stores and Philadelphia Premium Outlets has daily bargains. But don't miss Skippack. The town avoided modern urban redesign and rejects all corporate outlets, chains and franchises. It's all independent stores, restaurants and businesses.

Middleton isn't the norm

Re: 'Is Kate Middleton making other moms look bad?' (Metro, May 4) Kate Middleton is an awesome role model. Judging her to be otherwise based on her birthing style isn't fair to her. Every mother has their own way of going through the birthing process, and they need to understand their own bodies and what they are capable of instead of comparing themselves to someone who has access to the top medical professionals. I admire Kate for being strong in how she approached giving birth to her daughter. Other moms need to understand that their situation is a lot different than hers and that she isn't necessarily the norm.

Support Amtrak

Lets all get on board to join May 9th — National Amtrak Day. Why not ask elected officials to support a dedicated capital revenue stream that could include allocating a penny-per-gallon gasoline tax to Amtrak. These funds could provide a reliable yearly source for financing capital investments to upgrade tracks, signals, passenger equipment, stations and maintenance facilities. Any responsible agency needs the assistance of a long-term dedicated secure revenue stream. This is needed to develop a capital infrastructure plan for maintaining both an operating system in a state of good repair and any system expansion. Perhaps establish a reasonable minimum farebox recovery rate of 50 percent to justify continued operation of any route. In the long run, these simple reforms would take the politics out of intercity passenger service. Ask unions to allow management more flexibility in work rules and assignments to support greater productivity. The ability of Amtrak to reduce travel time by increasing the speed of service in high-density corridors can provide consumers with choices other than flying, driving or taking a bus.

A bad look for Brady as NFL releases report

NFL. Tom Brady looks like a liar after Pats employee texts are revealed.

Not much can rattle Tom Brady. But No. 12 was the most nervous man in the greater Foxboro area back on Jan. 22.

In a nationally broadcast press conference that day, Brady openly discussed how he likes his footballs on the lower side when it comes to air pressure. He also said that he had little interaction with Patriots employees who handle game-day balls. That at least appears to be untrue, based on this text exchange between Jim McNally (the Officials' locker room attendant for the Patriots) and John Jastremski (equipment assistant for the Patriots), released in Wednesday's Wells Report on "Deflategate":

McNally: "Tom Sucks ... I'm going to make that next ball a f— balloon."

Jastremski: "Talked to him last night. He actually brought you up and said you must have a lot of stress trying to get them done ... I told him it was. He was right though ... I checked some of the balls this morning ... The refs f— us ... a few of them were at almost 16. (nearly OVER-inflated) They didn't recheck them after

Deflating fallout

What we learned Wednesday:

- A 243-page report by NFL-appointed attorney Ted Wells said that it is "probable" that New England Patriots personnel deliberately deflated balls during the AFC Championship Game and that Tom Brady was probably "at least generally aware" of ball deflation.
- The report said that Pats locker room attendant Jim McNally likely took game balls into a bathroom at Gillette and deflated balls.
- According to ESPN's Adam Scheffer, the NFL is considering discipline for Brady, McNally and equipment assistant John Jastremski.
- Contrary to earlier reports, the NFL found that there was no "deliberate" attempt by the Patriots to introduce a non-approved kicking ball in the AFC title game.

they put air in them."

McNally: "F— Tom ... 16 is nothing ... wait till next Sunday."

Jastremski: "OMG! Spaz."

This interaction occurred after a game against the New York Jets in which Brady complained about air pressure. It's quite obvious from that exchange that Brady knows exactly who McNally is and what he does.

The issue with painting Brady as the true bad guy in this whole thing is that it's not against the rules to prefer a football to have certain air pressure. And in the above conversation, it's tough to judge exactly what Brady was complaining about. Were the balls too hard or too soft for his liking in the Jets game?

Blowing up a ball to be a "balloon" could either mean that McNally's going to blow it up to be the size of a balloon (equaling over-inflation) or he's going to make the ball feel as light as a balloon (equaling under-inflation). The "16 is nothing" comment makes one think that McNally is going to go against Brady's wishes and actually overinflate the balls in order to impress the refs.

Either way, it's clear that Brady cares (or cared) a good deal about air pressure. Does that make him a liar? Maybe. Does that make him 100 percent guilty for Deflategate and should he be suspended multiple games for the 2015 season? The league will soon decide.

NFL. Kraft rushes to slam report, defend Patriots

The Patriots and those close to the Patriots were obviously in defense mode yesterday in light of the Wells Report. Patriots owner Robert Kraft shredded the league's findings, saying, "To say we are disappointed in its findings, which do not include any incontrovertible or hard evidence of deliberate deflation of footballs at the AFC Championship Game, would be a gross understatement. ... What is not highlighted in the text of the report is that three of the Colts' four footballs measured by at least one official were under the required psi level. As far as we are aware, there is no comparable data available from any other game because, in the history of the NFL, psi levels of footballs have never been measured at halftime, in any climate." MATT BURKE

Betts continues his strong start to 2015 season

MLB. Red Sox sensation Mookie Betts is making history in center field at Fenway Park as he establishes himself as an everyday major leaguer.

in 1975.

Betts' first home run in the sixth inning actually broke up Rays starter Drew Smyly's no-hit bid.

Coincidentally, Betts' performance Tuesday came with Rice in attendance as the 1975 team was honored for their 40th anniversary.

"I think we just needed a win," said Betts. "But a win like this is huge because it's a momentum thing. We can carry it into tomorrow and whoever is on the bump I'm sure is going to continue that and we'll score a few more runs tomorrow."

While Betts may be a little modest putting the team first, manager John Farrell acknowledged Betts is a one-of-a-kind talent.

"One heck of an athlete that — we're seeing some special things in a short glimpse," said Farrell.

Through 26 games, Betts is hitting .234/.306/.411 with four home runs and 17 RBIs. Although the .234 average seems low, he's deserved better, as he's had a number of hard-hit balls that have gone for outs.

Thinking back to the first week of the season, he crushed a few balls that would have been home runs in the middle of the summer, but went for outs then.

"For what we saw from

By the numbers

Betts was a fifth-round draft pick for the Red Sox in 2011. He made it through nearly every level of minor league baseball in less than three full years.

spring training on, take away the average, his timing at the plate is pretty consistent even though he's had some balls where he's hit hard right at some people," Farrell said. "His hand-eye coordination allows him to get that kind of swing on a first pitch that he sees."

Looking at some of the other young players' starts to their careers — Xander Bogaerts hitting .240 in his first full season and Jackie Bradley scuffling in his second full season, hitting .198 before being demoted to Triple-A Pawtucket, Betts is doing more than what's expected.

"I think it's been alright," Betts said of his season. "I've had a couple balls that didn't fall for me, mix in some bad at-bats as well. But I feel like I'm close and right where I want to be."

Betts and pieces

Here are some interesting facts about the Sox's up-and-coming outfielder Mookie Betts:

- Betts made his Major League debut last season against the Yankees on June 28.
- In 2013 and 2014, Betts reached base in 66 straight regular-season games plus five playoff games for a combined streak of 71 games.
- When he hit his first career Grand Slam on August 29 of last season, he was the youngest to do so for the Sox in 49 seasons at age 21.
- According to The Boston Globe, Betts is named Mookie, in part, so his initials spell "MLB."
